Challenging the current supplier model is necessary. Peer to peer energy trading is likely to be one of the most disruptive technologies transforming how the energy sector operates. It will result in more widespread adoption of renewable energy generation and battery storage. Facilitating an energy transaction without the need for a third party will result in cost savings and contribute to the shift to a sharing, more resource efficient economy. WCC has investigated the potential for implementing a variety of renewable energy technologies on its own estate - such as ground mounted solar PV, wind, anaerobic digestion and growing its own wood fuel. A number of the electricity generating technology schemes already investigated would become economically viable with the proposed change in the legislation if WCC could sell directly to local consumers.
